Enhance your Financial Insights &
Authenticate your Write-up

by

Anushka Trivedi

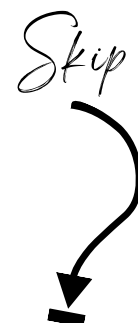

In my content writing journey,
One thing I am proud of is my research, which I am going to share with you today. As a finance content writer, the first and foremost aspect you need to explore is the authenticity of the data you are writing in your article or any sort of write-up.

Even if a decimal goes wrong, the company will have to bear the responsibility of providing the wrong information for which you are working. It will ruin your reputation and brand's image as well.

I have been rejected many times but never due to my wrong research. If you also want this type of confidence in your researched write-up, you are at the right place.

Before starting up, let me tell you that I have given 100+ writing interviews, and 50+ editing interviews, and worked with 30+ fintech founders and financial service providers like investment bankers, wealth managers, financial planners, and advisors.

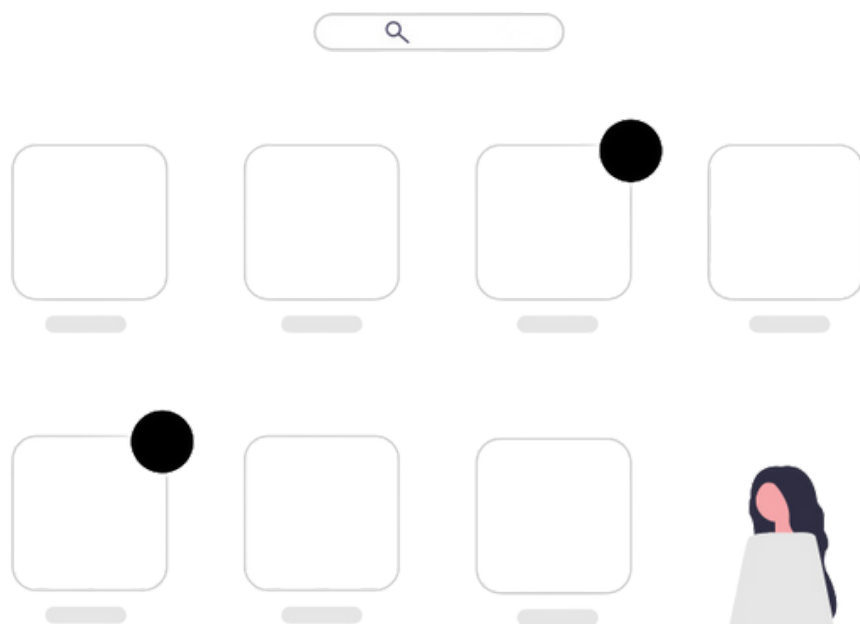

Simultaneously, I expanded my team from 1 to 10 financial writers. Moreover, I have given 20+ consultation calls within the last 6 months!

On question was common irrespective of their position, intention of asking that question, and level of experience-

What are your Resources?

Industry leaders asking me to test my authenticity and credibility whereas new writers asking me to start their own journey smoothly!

Data Verification

It's quite usual that you find a topic on a social media platform or in any news agency, but there is still a lack of trust that you need to get rid of.

Here are a few sources from where I verify my data which is so basic and builds authenticity in my work-

1. The original source of data

For example, if any notification or data is issued by the Ministry of Finance, then I will get it confirmed from the original website only.

2. Research platforms

There are various organizations like Statista, ResearchGate that work only in the field of research. They provide data on paid versions as well where you will get detailed information on reports.

3. Data Research

No wonder in the field of finance, only data that matters a lot. Let's understand this via an example, you want 25 years of historical data of Nifty 50. You can simply go to the website of NSE, then go to the market data and you can explore anything you want.

Usually, as a writer, you may trust the data written on a news website and use it to simplify your process. But by doing this, you will definitely be able to stand out as an authentic writer.

Writing is something others can do as well but being authentic for a BFSI company is something you will get paid for.

If you want to be a high-paying finance content writer, make sure you stand out as an authentic writer!!!
